Do you provide or support CATV, IPTV, video distribution, digital signage, videoconferencing, or other video technologies to your college or university campus?

Are you a video or media professional working with student or campus produced stations or programs on your campus?

Does your company provide programming, distribution, or production products and/or services that support on-campus video technology teams?

If you answered YES to any of these questions, then you should join AHECTA - Association of Higher Education Campus Television Administrators!

AHECTA provides support for anyone involved in campus video delivery, programming, and collaboration, and its integration into the academic community. Representing a young industry within higher education, AHECTA continues to grow as the ONLY organization that brings together university professionals and the vendors who supply products, partnerships, and industry expertise.

Annual Conference

The AHECTA Annual Conference provides an excellent opportunity for members and non-members to gather, share, and learn in an informal and relaxed setting. Conference sessions are based on member's suggestions. Recent topics have included video on demand, copyright issues, technology trends, student productions, and more. Interaction and networking with industry experts, service and equipment vendors, and representatives from college campuses across the U.S. is an important part of the conference.

Annual conference rates are kept as low as possible, and the location varies from region to region across the country each year.

Log on to our website at www.ahecta.org for more details. You'll find the latest association news, membership directories, annual conference information, Board of Directors contact information, and much more.

AHECTA is a member of the Council of Higher Education Management Associations (CHEMA).
